

On the occasion of the next Marie Skłodowska-Curie Actions (MSCA) conference which will take place in Mons (BE) on 18th-19th April, a call for posters is launched.

People get the opportunity to showcase their research and their research careers in a poster or another medium. The final idea is that conference attendees learn something about specific research but also and at least as important that the diversity of posters, other used media and participants show the conference attendees that there is no specific career path that is most preferable but that there is a very wide range of possibilities in research and research careers and they are all precious.

All topics (all disciplines but also stories with links to policy making, research governance, success stories or just failure stories of individual researchers, ...) are eligible. Applicants can work in the academia, in public service, in companies, or in NGOs, etc.

Selected posters will be displayed during the whole conference. On the first day of the conference, participants will be given the opportunity to present their posters during the breaks.

A poll will be organized during the conference (only for physical attendees). The two most voted-for posters will be announced at the end of the event. They will receive an award.

Submission process

This call for posters is open to all professionals promoting and/or working on science in research institutes, higher education institutions, national agencies, funding agencies, NGOs, etc.

Applications (maximum 2 pages) must include the following:

- A description of the institution coordinating the project
- A brief description of the project
- The link with the topic of the conference: Researchers' careers: multiple pathways.

Criteria for posters:

- Available under CC By license
- Royalty-free, so that they can be distributed for promotional purposes, including on social media and on the website
- Written in English.

Submissions should be sent to info@msca2024.eu with the subject line: "MSCA BE Call for Posters".
